MESSAGE FROM THE ISAPS PRESIDENT

Lina Triana, MD
ISAPS President

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

Once again, thank you to all of you who are taking action towards something bigger than yourselves: the Aesthetic World.

This past weekend, we had an intense National Secretaries meeting with more than 50 National Secretaries from all over the world whom I really want to acknowledge for being there on a Sunday, taking time away from their families and loved ones, individuals with a high-level of commitment towards ISAPS.

Today, I want to seek from all our members the same that I requested from our National Secretaries group: take action towards being ambassadors in these three specific tasks:

1. Cartagena World Congress June 11-15, 2024

Give your country's colleagues the possibility of discovering the ISAPS Cartagena World Congress and participating in an exchange of knowledge and networking opportunities while enjoying Colombia's culture of tropical vibes and fun. Encourage all your plastic surgery friends and your office staff as Associate members to come to Cartagena.

2. Global Statistics

It is in your hands to ensure your country is cited in the world's leading global statistics survey on aesthetic procedures. To make this happen, you need to achieve the highest number of responses possible from your country to get listed on the global statistics survey, which this year closes early since our goal is to present the statistics during our meeting in Cartagena. Encourage others to respond to the global statistics survey here.

3. ISAPS Membership

Leaders unite those who share common purposes, and this is who we are as ISAPS. So, in this context, I invite you to work on expanding your country's ISAPS membership, with the help of your country's National Secretaries who are here to support you in this task. I invite you, as ISAPS members, to take action on these three specific tasks. Your involvement is key to fulfilling them and leading in the Aesthetic World.

And get ready for Cartagena! What to expect...

Plan to arrive on June 10, 2024, and stay through June 16, 2024, so you do not miss the many activities we have prepared for you, which includes more than 350 confirmed speakers with interactive sessions and master classes, rapid sessions, complications and revision sessions, patient safety, clinical pearls, cadaver dissection sessions, workshops, and lunch with the experts.

Interview with
Rezarta Kapaj, MD
National Secretary, Albania

Meet ISAPS' Very First National Secretary for Albania: Rezarta Kapaj!

The ISAPS National Secretaries assist the Executive Office and the Board of Directors, communicating on their behalf with ISAPS members and other aesthetic plastic surgeons in their country. Each member country with at least three members may elect a National Secretary to represent their interests in ISAPS and work on strategic priorities.

We look forward to seeing her represent her country and ISAPS and are eager to share her views on how she will help support ISAPS.

ISAPS: What does it mean for you to represent ISAPS in the capacity of National Secretary?

KAPAJ: It's a great honor to represent ISAPS as a National Secretary for my country. For me personally, the opportunity to put my very small country on the map of one of the biggest plastic surgery societies in the world has been a great privilege. Likewise, representing ISAPS for my fellow plastic surgeons and residents is such a pleasure. I have witnessed an increasing interest in ISAPS month after month since my enrollment.

ISAPS: As National Secretary, what are three things you hope to accomplish during your tenure?

KAPAJ: 1. Making ISAPS educational content more accessible to Residents and Fellows. I genuinely believe in the power of education, and I am positive there is no better library than the content of ISAPS webinars, journals, and meetings.

2. Having visiting members of ISAPS as guests in our country would be a great opportunity for the members of our National Society and Residents to witness some of the giants of the field working in real-time.

3. Perhaps a farfetched dream, but organizing an ISAPS meeting in Tirana.

ISAPS: What is your most unforgettable memory from being a member of ISAPS?

KAPAJ: The moment I got accepted into ISAPS is a moment I will cherish for a long time. I studied plastic surgery in Turkey, and it was my first year back in my country. I was so happy to be the first Albanian ISAPS member, followed by many.

Another moment I will always remember is the moment our National Society got endorsed by ISAPS. I got so emotional to see our National Society's name on the ISAPS list and I truly must thank our president for making this dream come true.

ISAPS: Will you attend the ISAPS World Congress 2024, in Cartagena, Colombia? If so, what speaker are you hoping to hear from and why?

KAPAJ: I will attend and have already registered! I don't have an actual speaker in mind, but I look forward to another very rich program as in every meeting over the years.

Tuberous Breast, Deformities, and Asymmetries: A Retrospective Analysis Comparing Fat Grafting Versus Mastopexy and Breast Implants

Pietro Gentile

The tuberous breast is considered a breast deformity characterized by varying degrees of herniation of the parenchyma, widened nipple-areolar complex (NAC), absence of the lower quadrants, and may involve several degrees of hypoplasia and asymmetry causing significant psychosocial distress.

The paper aimed to compare the results obtained in patients suffering tuberous breast treated with fat grafting (FG), with those of patients treated with a mastopexy and silicone implants (M-SI) also analyzing the influence of breast and chest deformities (degrees of hypoplasia and tuberous breast, volume and NAC asymmetry, pectus excavatum, and carinatum) in the reconstructive outcomes.

What About Pre- and Post-Op Pictures in Social Media?

During the past Congress in Athens, we presented several sessions on business development in cosmetic surgery; here, you will have the opportunity to approach the topic, „The Ethical Challenge in Social Media for Physicians: Balancing Promotion and Responsibility,“ presented by Dr. Sixtus Allert.

In the digital era, social media has become an indispensable tool for promoting and sharing our work, providing medical professionals with a unique platform to inform, educate, and advertise. However, this communication revolution has also transformed the traditional roles of us physicians, who must now take on entrepreneurial and business roles to stand out in the competitive world.

As physicians engage with social media, a significant challenge arises, which is the difficulty patients face in recognizing our roles. Are we merely doctors or businessmen? Confusion mounts when observing the growing trend among many physicians to blend entertainment with their posts, showcasing dance routines and humorous moments that could undermine professionalism.

The search for pre-and post-operative images by patients is increasingly common. However, the line between educational promotion and unnecessary exhibition becomes blurry when some physicians become influencers. The need to differentiate from this trend is vital to preserve professional integrity.

In some countries, there are regulations to prevent damage to the specialty's reputation and the physicians' credibility. Responsible publishing becomes imperative, and understanding what and how to post becomes crucial to maintaining a reputation.

In the process of educating patients, it has become common to post before-and-after photos of surgeries, but concern lies in the negative influence this may have on young individuals. The seriousness of content and responsibility in publication becomes essential, as it is not merely about the number of followers but about safety and trust.

Ethics in publishing plastic surgery images is a delicate matter. Some countries have codes of conduct regulating the use of before-and-after images. Failure to comply with these rules in the United States can lead to restrictions, prohibitions, and sanctions. Discussions in national societies emphasize the importance of setting limits on plastic surgeons' commercial use of social media.

MONTHLY E-MAGAZINE

The manipulation of images that do not reflect medical reality raises another ethical concern. Defining the postoperative time of photos and showcasing not only recent but also long-term results becomes a necessity. Additionally, using models in photographs and distinguishing between social media images and genuine medical photographs pose additional challenges.

The question arises about assessing the reliability of medical accounts and websites. Should there be an approval seal from medical societies to distinguish the most reliable professionals? However, the lack of global standards hinders the implementation of these criteria, as each country has its own rules.

Ultimately, finding a balance between promoting medical work on social media and moral responsibility remains a continuous challenge for healthcare professionals. The key lies in awareness of our role as educators, understanding our ethical responsibilities, and adopting practices that preserve the integrity of the medical profession in an increasingly digital world.
